Background

The Post-2011 Energy Efficiency Review (“Post-2011 Review”) is a public process to review and consider improvements to the BPA energy efficiency policy framework and associated implementation elements put in place on October 1, 2011.

Prior to 2011, BPA’s Energy Efficiency’s group conducted a public process to engage customers and other regional stakeholders about the role they think BPA should play in developing, incentivizing and monitoring energy efficiency programs after 2011. The goal for that public process was to gain feedback and support from the region on the structure of energy efficiency programs that BPA was planning to offer post-2011. Prior to the 2011 fiscal year beginning, BPA adopted a Post-2011 energy efficiency program strategy and policy for the agency through a public process. During the process, BPA and stakeholders agreed to review and consider improvements to the BPA energy efficiency policy framework after sufficient experience (one rate period) had been gained.
